What is medicinal cannabis?

Medicinal cannabis is a range of medicines sourced from the cannabis plant and made up of cannabinoids, the naturally occurring chemicals found in the plant.

Medicinal cannabis is just like any other prescription medicine that your doctor might prescribe, and are legally available in New Zealand. It is used to treat a wide range of ailment.

Medicinal cannabis can only be prescribed by a Registered Medical Practitioner and is dispensed by pharmacies. In New Zealand medicinal cannabis is available in a number of pharmaceutical products such as oils and gels which are produced under strict controls with specialist manufacturing equipment. Like other medicines, medicinal cannabis must meet international pharmaceutical standards and are rigorously tested for safety.

Is medicinal cannabis safe?

The risks of taking Medicinal Cannabis, particularly CBD are very small. Your doctor will start with a low dose and increase it until the desired effect or the maximum daily dose is reached.

As part of the consultation, our Doctor will take into consideration your medical conditions, the medication you are currently taking, and whether you have any allergies to medication.
